Little Detective:

We’ve heard that recently many primary students have been staying at school after classes! Parents only come to pick their children up at around 6 or 7pm after work. What exactly are they doing at school? Let’s start “After-School Investigation” at once.

Where are you going after school; After-School

Investigation Edition

Little Detective:

Found it! Why are there teachers helping them with homework?

[Super]:

Teacher of Scheme Operator for School-based After School Care Service Scheme, Cherry

Teacher, Cherry:

The “School-based After School Care Service Scheme” mainly supports primary students from single-parent households, allowing their parents to take up jobs. These students usually come here after school to do homework and revision.

Little Detective:

What are the edges for doing homework at school?

Teacher, Cherry:

A teacher usually takes care of five to six children.

We will provide supports tailored to their capabilities and needs.

After finishing homework at school, I can play and chat with classmates.

Little Detective:

Done with homework and it is only five! What's next?

Teacher, Ken:

We also care about the children's physical and mental health so we've prepared several emerging sports to help students develop their athletic skills and alleviate learning stress.

Little Detective:

This primary school offers art-related activities. Let's take a look right away.

Student (C):

After revision, I can do crafts, painting and play with classmates.

Little Detective:

What are the benefits for the parents whose child(ren) participated in the scheme?

[Super]:

Parent whose child(ren) participated in the School-based After School Care Service Scheme

Parent:

This scheme is great. She actually gets to play a little while doing homework and I don't have to worry about her safety. I can then attend to my work. When we get home, we can watch TV together, go to the park, or swim. Our relationship improves. If the opportunity arises next year, I would like to continue participating in the "School-based After School Care Service Scheme".

Little Detective:

No worries! There will definitely be a chance! The "School-based After School Care Service Scheme" has already been expanded since 2025/26 school year. All primary schools in Hong Kong can participate the number of service places remain uncapped! Investigation complete. Parents interested in joining, please inquire at your school as soon as possible!
